Consider the odds.

Long-term illnesses are more common than you think.

- 6 in 10 people in the United States have a chronic disease, a long-term health condition that may not have a cure.¹

- Every 40 seconds someone in the United States suffers a stroke.²

- Every 40 seconds someone in the United States suffers a heart attack.³

Financial impact.

- A 2018 poll found 67 percent of people worry about unexpected medical bills, more than they dread insurance deductibles, prescription drug costs or the basic staples of life: rent, food and gas.⁴

- 137 million Americans are struggling with medical debt.⁵

- Chronic diseases are the leading cause of death and have the highest healthcare costs.⁶

- 62 percent of Americans struggling with medical bills have health insurance.⁷

Think about it

You may be at more risk for a chronic illness than you think. Are you and your loved ones prepared for that expense? The living benefits of life insurance can offer flexibility and options to cover a variety of needs in the event you have a terminal, critical or chronic illness.

Cover your “what ifs” and protect yourself against the risk.

No one is immune to chronic diseases, such as heart disease, diabetes, Alzheimer’s, stroke or cancer. Eating healthy and regular exercise can help decrease your chances of such illnesses, but it’s important you protect yourself against the “what ifs.” Life insurance with living benefits can help offer that protection.

Living benefits on your life insurance policy is called an accelerated death benefit rider. You know life insurance makes a payment, called a death benefit, to your beneficiaries when you pass away. But life insurance can be more than a death benefit payment. It can also help provide for you and your loved ones while you’re still living. Should you become terminally ill, or be diagnosed with a qualifying chronic or critical illness, you can use your accelerated death benefit rider living benefits to help cover your medical costs, or other expenses.

The money you use with living benefits will be deducted from the final death benefit payment, but don’t worry, your loved ones can still receive a reduced death benefit. Life insurance with living benefits helps protect your loved ones from financial strain if you have a serious illness or you pass away.

Take the next step to protect your family.

Talk to your insurance agent today to find out how life insurance with living benefits can help protect your family with flexibility and options to cover a variety of needs.
